

Marburg: The Four Horsemen, the Marburg Files, Snow White and Revolution – A Prussian Dream

Late in 2021, the World Health Organization (WHO) issued yet another warning about another potentially-fatal virus: The Marburg Virus.

<https://globalnews.ca/video/8103800/who-says-4-high-risk-contacts-identified-after-case-of-marburg-virus-reported-in-guinea/>

Recall that Trump continually referred to himself as a “wartime president” and that the US had been attacked, “like never before; worse than 9-11; worse than Pearl Harbor”. These are very serious warnings and should be heeded.

The world was already learning an old lesson; “the first casualty in war, is the truth”. At the forefront of this war was a virus, and if we truly are in a war against an invisible enemy, as Trump has proclaimed, then anything said by the ‘purveyors of fear’, should be taken with caution.

What intrigued me was the name, “Marburg”. It is odd to name a virus after an old German town. Coincidentally, there are many other strange coincidences surrounding historical Marburg, and they all lead back to Prussia.

WHO and the Marxist

One of the most interesting things about the WHO during the 2020-21 pandemic, is their Director-General, Tedros Adhanom Ghebreyesus. He is not a medical doctor, but rather a member of the Tigrayan Peoples Liberation Front (TPLF) – a Marxist political party that is listed in the Global Terrorism Database for its links to gross human rights violations.

The director-general of the Chinese Communist Party (CCP)-influenced World Health Organization (WHO), Tedros Adhanom Ghebreyesus, is not a medical doctor and is a member of a Marxist-Leninist Ethiopian political party that analysts have listed as a perpetrator of terrorism.

WHO & #China have enjoyed a long & productive partnership. WHO is proud to have supported the overseas training of more than 2000 Chinese #HealthWorkers. Grateful for China's commitment to strengthening health systems in other countries through its Belt and Road Initiative.

Tedros also appears to have an affinity with things which are sexually abusive. Here he recreates his own version of Frederick the Great's "sans souci" palace.

While we all wish him all the luck in his local bar, our focus on Tedros is on his Marxist, terrorist past. This is going to be important in unlocking the culture of Marburg.

Marburg: The Virus

Drawing attention to the Marburg Virus simply aims to show it was, and still is, potentially real. According to Bill Gates' GAVI institute, if you get this virus, you have a 90% chance to develop fever, chills, vomit, then bleed out from every orifice, until you die.

And according to GAVI, it could be the next pandemic to strike humanity.

In August 1967, a cluster of patients in Marburg and Frankfurt, in Germany, and in Belgrade (then Yugoslavia, now Serbia), began showing symptoms of an infectious disease – a high fever, chills, muscle ache, and vomiting. The patients worsened over the next few days, until they began bleeding from every orifice in their body, including needle puncture wounds. In total 31 people died.

Source: <https://www.gavi.org/vaccineswork/next-pandemic/marburg>

The virus killed 31 people in 1967, after lab workers were exposed to tissues of infected African green monkey. Notably, it was first discovered in the Germany city of Marburg, which is central to this entire story.

Marburg the Town: The Apocalypse of the Four Horsemen

The origins of Marburg date back to 1140 A.D. It was subject to many wars, the most famous being the Thirty Years' War (1618-1648), where Marburg and surrounding territory lost more than 66% of its population. It suffered a loss of life that surpassed WWI and WWII.

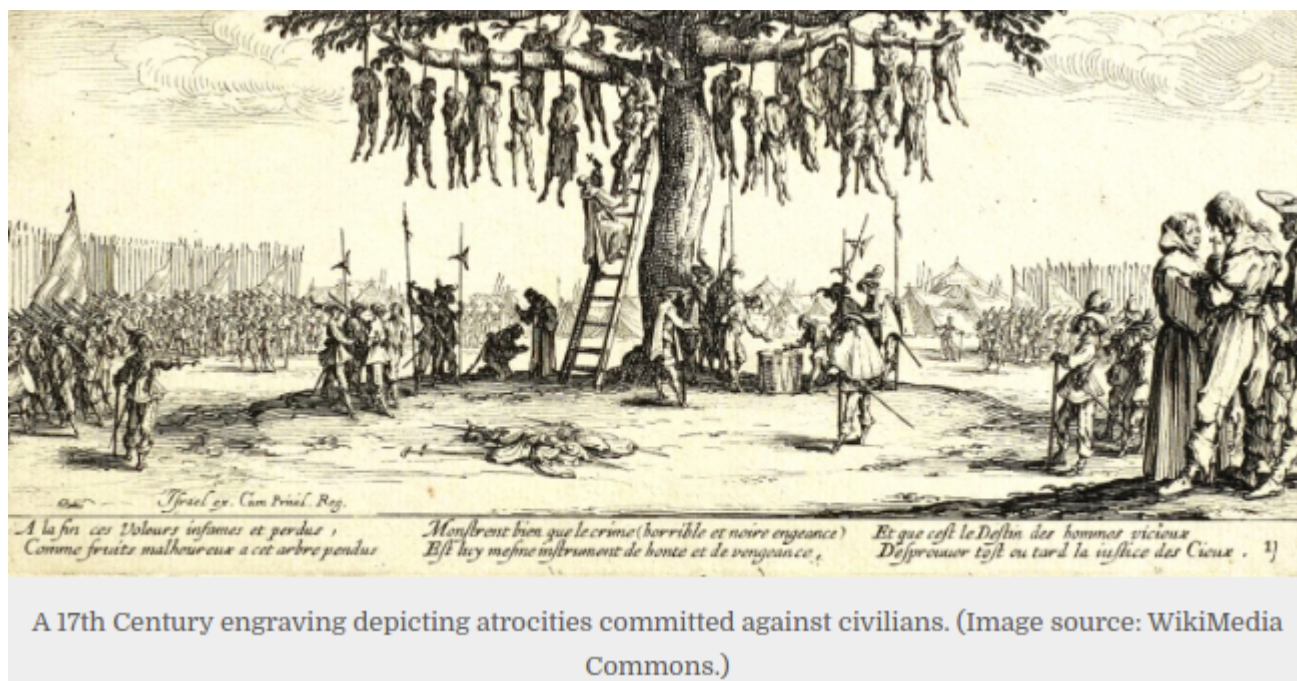

After 1605, Marburg became just another provincial town, known mostly for the University of Marburg. It became a virtual backwater for two centuries after the Thirty Years' War (1618–48), when it was fought over by Hessen-Darmstadt and Hesse-Kassel. The Hessian territory around Marburg lost more than two-thirds of its population, which was more than in any later wars (including World War I and World War II) combined.

Germany. The image of death and destruction created by such plights has defined the social history of the Thirty Years War to a greater extent than almost any other event in early modern European history. If ever there was a moment when the ravages of the apocalyptic horsemen—war, famine, plague, and death—were evident, it was during the war. This made the war one of the first issues to develop

At least eight million people died from not just the war, but from famine and disease.

The precise death toll of the Thirty Years War will likely never be known, but the sheer size of the estimates of both military and civilian losses are staggering and wouldn't be surpassed until the conflicts of the 20th century. At least eight million people are believed to have died, while several parts

The war was so bad, it reshuffled the European Order. It was the Great Reset of its day, and Prussia would to rise to prominence from it. There is that familiar pattern, again.

10. It marked a reshuffling of the old European order

What was the legacy of the Thirty Years War? In my view, the trauma of the war meant that Germans never again fought for their religion on such a scale. For the Habsburgs, it meant that the Holy Roman Empire would become decentralized, as powers like Prussia rose to prominence. Yet in their own lands,

Marburg became a backwater-town thereafter, under the Electorate of Hessen. Eventually Prussia was able to annex Marburg around 1866. Until then, Marburg was known only for its university, but it was also chosen as the administrative center of the Prussian empire. It became known for its academics, students and public servants. It's library housed many documents that were important to Prussia, as we shall unpack later.

Marxburg the University

Marburg was renowned for its university, now known as Philipps University of Marburg, founded in 1549. By 1609, it became a world center for the study of chemistry. It maintained its strong tradition in chemistry throughout the centuries. The Marburg Virus was named for good reason:

Marburg virus was first discovered at the Philipps University of Marburg in Germany in 1967. Researchers and laboratory technicians

Apart from discovering a deadly disease after fiddling with the African green monkey, the university is also popular for another academic reason: Its proud academic-Marxist stronghold.

Most are aware of Critical Race Theory (CRT) and its devastating effects in the schools across the USA. CRT was born from an ideology espoused by the Frankfurt School, known as “critical theory”. The Frankfurt School fled Germany in 1933 when the Nazis came to power, finding a home at Columbia University.

Coming to America

In 1934, the school was reborn at Columbia University. Its members began to exert their ideas on American culture.

It was at Columbia University that the school honed the tool it would use to destroy Western culture: the printed word.

The school published a lot of popular material. The first of these was Critical Theory.

Critical Theory* is a play on semantics. The theory was simple: criticize every pillar of Western culture—family, democracy, common law, freedom of speech, and others. The hope was that these pillars would crumble under the pressure.

<https://sagaciousnewsnetwork.net/the-birth-of-cultural-marxism-how-the-frankfurt-school-changed-america/>

The Frankfurt School birthed devout cultural Marxists such as Saul Alinsky, who in turn inspired disciples, such as Barack Obama and Hillary Clinton.

However, as the Frankfurt School fled Germany, a sister-school remained and would blossom over time. That would be later known as the Marburg School.

Alongside the ‘critical theory’ of the Frankfurt School, West Germany was also home to another influential Marxist current known as the Marburg School. In this volume, Marburg disciple Lothar Peter traces the school’s history and situates it in the political discourse and developments of its time. The Like all good Marxists, apparently the academics will get it right the next time they get the chance. Despite past failures, Marxism will not ‘always’ in mass starvation, war and death.

So far, Marburg is known for a virus, an Apocalyptic war, becoming the Prussian administration centre, and a Marxist university.

Let’s see what else we can unpack about the wonderful Prussian town of Marburg.

Fairy-tale Anon: Marburg and the Grimm Tales of Child Abuse

This chapter is also available as a stand-alone post [here]

Marburg was significant to the rise of Prussian ideology and it became the administrative and educational capital of Prussia.

Marburg is famous for the Brothers Grimm. Known for their epic collation of fairy tales, “The Brothers Grimm”, their journey is more elaborate than the story of Snow White.

Born around 1785, the brothers were plunged into poverty when their father died in 1796. It is suggested the experience of poverty deeply affected them. Whether that informed the darkness that was portrayed in their books, or perhaps a drive to succeed and rectify the problems of a disjointed Germania, we may never know.

By 1805, the brothers had enrolled in legal studies at the University of Marburg. At the University they discovered a passion for German folklore. Perhaps the reason why Prussia turned Marburg into its administrative center is that the University was a treasure trove of historical documentation on past events, tales, folklore and other curiosities of German history.

It appears the brothers Grimm also found this information useful, and decided to write over 200 “fairy tales”, revealing the information they had discovered.

Fairy-tale Anon:

Back in the day, free thinkers in Europe were a danger to the autocratic rule of the king. Germany, and in-particular Prussia, was no exception. In fact, Prussia treated dissenters very severely, including its future kings, as Frederick the Great knew, all too well.

The brothers' Grimm were known as political activists. Later in their lives they had a vision that Germany needed to be united under a constitution, rather than by segregated principalities. This opinion led to their dismissal from the University of Göttingen, as it was considered an act of political radicalism.

The Dismissal of the Brothers Grimm from the University of Göttingen

By Jeffrey L. Sammons

We do not normally think of the Brothers Grimm as political radicals—nor were they. But conditions in Germany in the first half of the nineteenth century were such that even these mild and introverted scholars could fall afoul of authority. We are reminded of this by the Beinecke Library's recent acquisition of an important pamphlet, Jacob Grimm über seine Entlassung, published at the safe distance of Basel early in 1838, with which Jacob protested his and his brother's summary dismissal from the University of Göttingen by the King of Hanover.

Source: <https://www.jstor.org/stable/40858602>

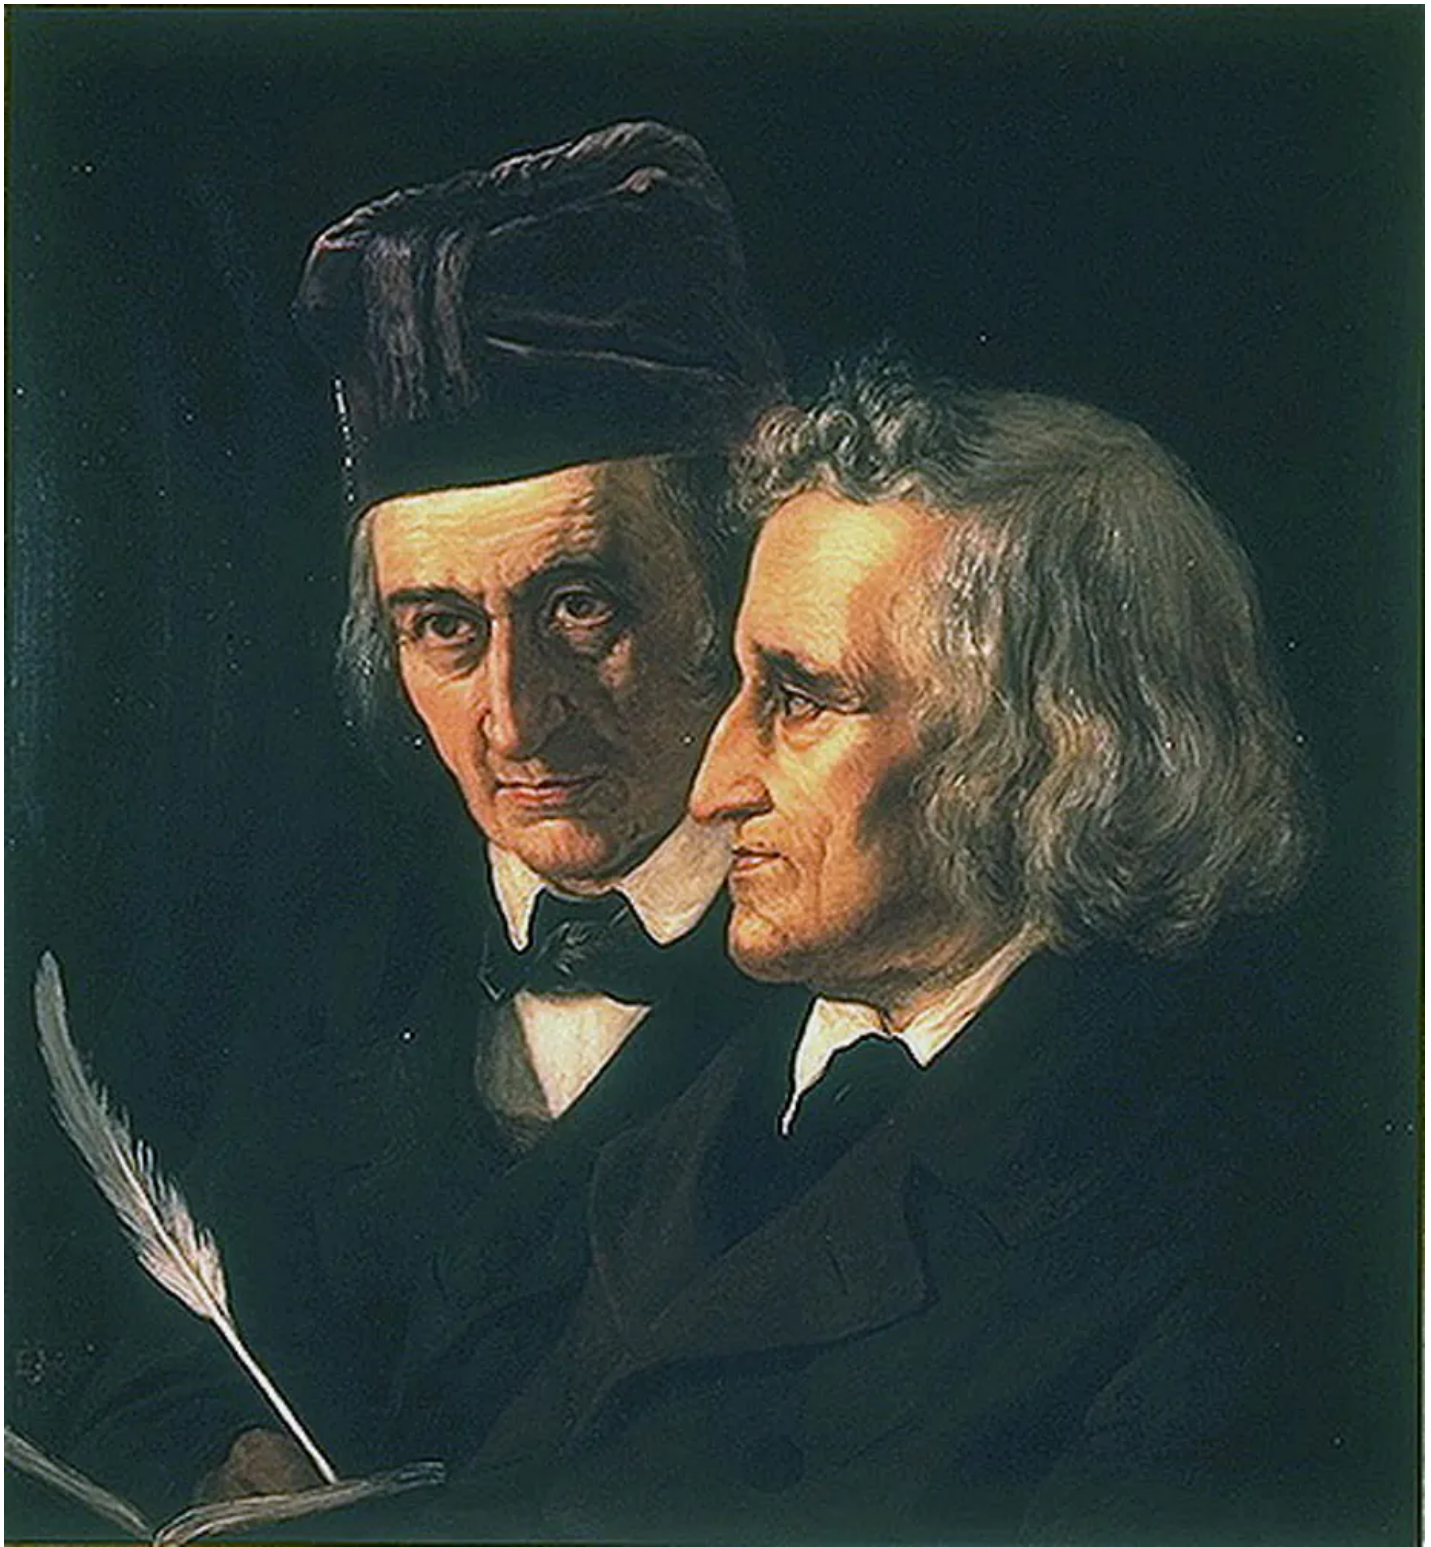

Where is this all going? The brothers had a treasure trove of historical information at their fingertips at the University of Marburg. Their book was offered as a collaboration of events, myths and legends; stories that could only come from the historical records of documented fiction. Was it fiction, or the narration of documents collected throughout the ages?

What if the brothers had stumbled upon documented events and were horrified at what they had discovered? If this were true, exposing these events to the public would seal their fate, as the ruling nobility would surely ‘have their head’ for exposing the secrets being held at Marburg.

What if the only way to get these stories out to the public was through “fairy tales”? Were they revealing horrible truths cloaked as fantasy in an attempt to bring awareness to the general public of an evil that lurked within their midst? Could “fairy tales” contain much more truth than we ever knew?

If true, in order to remain alive and get the message out to the public, the brothers Grimm would need to become 19th century Anons: They would become Fairy-tale Anon.

It appears the original version of The Brothers Grimm was not definitely not intended for children.

The very first edition, published in German in 1812, is a strange beast in the literary history of fairy tales.

The Grimms originally produced a scholarly work to preserve the folk tales of the German people with a decidedly philological bent. Despite its title, the book was not intended for children to access independently. Unsurprisingly, neither it, nor the second volume released in 1815, was a bestseller.

Source: <https://theconversation.com/reader-beware-the-nasty-new-edition-of-the-brothers-grimm-34537>

For those who dug deeper into the original Brothers Grimm, the underlying themes they were discovering, and revealing, were shocking: child abuse involving neglect; emotional, physical and sexual abuse; and cannibalism.

The original versions, as translated by Jack Zipes (https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Jack_Zipes) paint a vastly different narrative, character-development and overall plot, than compared to what we know in today's "adjusted" editions.

This is where it gets ugly:

of the remakes of the Grimms' fairytales. But in the original versions, it was Hansel and Gretel's own mother who tried to abandon her children in the forest and Snow White's real mom who not only hired a huntsman to murder the 7-year-old girl but also planned to eat her organs. In an

In the first version of Rapunzel, the evil fairy finds out about the Prince when her naive charge wonders aloud, "Tell me, Mother Gothel, why are my clothes becoming too tight? They don't fit me any more." The reader, or listener, is to infer from this that Rapunzel has become impregnated by the Prince during their "merry time" together.

It is my view that the brothers believed they were acting as literary historians, rather than fictional writers. In some cases, stories were eventually cut out all-together. They were being censored.

5. SOME STORIES GOT CUT ALTOGETHER.

The first edition of Grimm's Fairy Tales was 156 tales, and the final edition was 210—but they didn't only add stories in the interim. The deluge of similar tales they received after the first publication drew widespread acclaim gave the brothers plenty of material to work with, but certain tales just couldn't be sufficiently amended to fit a less gruesome standard. One such story was the aptly-named "How Some Children Played At Slaughtering." In it, two children play as a pig and a butcher. As part of the game, the older brother slits his younger brother's throat, killing him. When their mother finds the scene, she becomes so enraged that she kills the older brother. While she was off doing this, the youngest son drowns in the bath. Now the mother is so despondent that she hangs herself. Eventually, the father returns. When he finds his whole family dead he, too, dies—of heartbreak. Even with a liberal approach to editing, it's unlikely such a story could be Disneyfied.

Snow White, Hansel and Gretel, Cinderella, Frog Prince and the other 200 stories written were all completely different to what we know of them today. Were they just twisted to suit our current standards, or were these movies an attempt to hide what Fairy-tale Anon tried to expose so long ago?

The Original Snow White:

Written in 1812, there are stark differences between the modern, accepted Snow White story and what was originally written. Here are some:

- There was no step mother, it was her own mom.
- She was 7, and her mom wanted the huntsman to bring back her own daughter's organs so she could eat them.
- The huntsman brings back a boar's lungs and liver, and the mother – believing it is her daughter's – boils them in salt and eats them.
- The dwarves have no names, just personalities, which is symbolic of trauma and compartmentalisation.
- The evil mom comes to the dwarf's house three times and tries to kill Snow White each time. On the third time she succeeds. The dwarves put her in a glass coffin.
- Years later, a prince (nobility) comes to the house and sees the dead girl. Falls in love with her (remember how old she was) and asks to buy the girl from the dwarves.
- As his servants carry her home, they drop the casket which causes Snow White to spit out the poison apple as she falls to the ground, and she comes alive.
- Snow White and the prince marry, inviting mom to the wedding. This is when the ending takes on a strange act of revenge.

Snow White and the prince get married, and the evil step-mother is invited to the wedding. Here's my favorite part. When she sees Snow White, alive and marrying a prince, she is "so petrified with fright that she could not budge. Iron slippers had already been heated over a fire, and they were brought over to her with tongs. Finally, she had to put on the red-hot slippers and dance until she fell down dead."

There is no concrete evidence that the Brothers Grimm were trying to warn the world of a network of ritual child abuse and cannibalism. However, we are dealing with an invisible enemy!

In yet another crazy coincidence, we learn that notorious pedophile, Jeffrey Epstein, and his friends had a weird association with Snow White in their communiques.

Jes Staley reportedly exchanged 1,200 emails with Jeffrey Epstein in four years

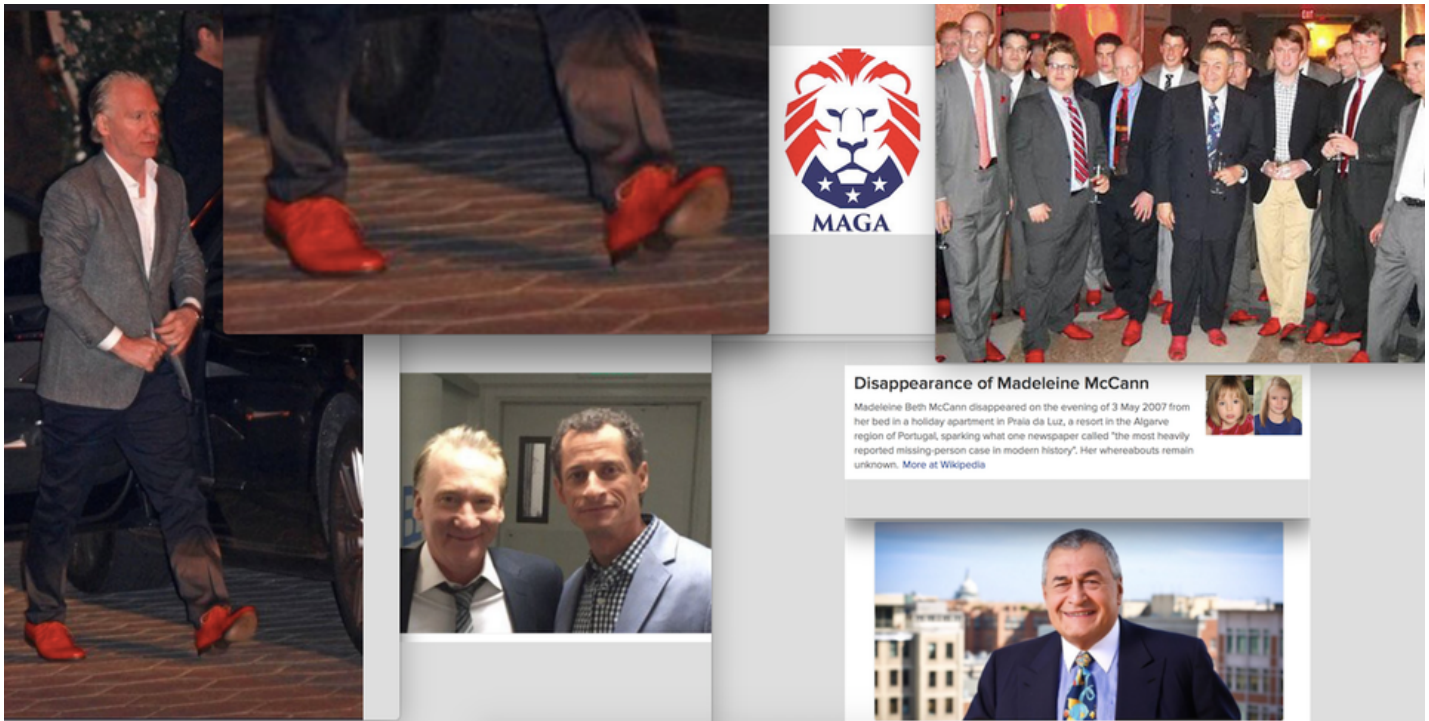

Some emails between ex-Barclays boss and Epstein used unexplained phrases such as 'snow white', FT reports

<https://www.theguardian.com/business/2021/nov/12/jess-staley-ex-barclays-boss-emails-jeffrey-epstein-reports>

An even stranger twist, is the elite's obsession with red shoes. Just like Snow White's cannibal mom, are they also dancing around in red-hot slippers?

These are very strange coincidences that seem directly related to a horror story, first tabulated by the Brothers Grimm. The brothers were two men with a goal to improve the situation in the lands of Germany, in which they lived. Considering themselves to be literary historians, they decided to start digging and publicly tell the tales they were uncovering in private.

All that digging came from the relatively unknown Prussian town of Marburg.

Marburg Files, Prince Philip, Hitler and the Queen of England

This chapter is also available as a standalone file [\[here\]](#)

When Adolph Hitler rose to power, he made no changes to the administrative infrastructure of the Kaiser. In fact, the #PrussiaGate papers will show that Hitler was dutifully administrated by the Kaiser and his loyal Prussian army. The centre of Nazi administration was Marburg.

The appointed chief of the administration was a man by the name of Erich Koch.

Erich Koch (19 June 1896 – 12 November 1986) was a Gauleiter of the Nazi Party (NSDAP) in East Prussia from 1 October 1928 until 1945. Between 1941 and 1945 he was Chief of Civil Administration (Chef der Zivilverwaltung) of Bezirk Bialystok. During this period, he was also the

The rise and fall of the German Nazi Party witnessed the rise and fall of many horrendously evil men. In 1945, the Nazi government and the empire it had founded neared its doom. Many of those men tried to use their privileged positions to escape the consequences of their actions.

Source: <https://www.warhistoryonline.com/world-war-ii/erich-koch-war-criminal.html>

As head of the administrative office of the entire Nazi apparatus, Koch would have had access to every communique that Germany possessed, past and present, including the information the Brothers' Grimm used to write their "fairy tales".

One such communique was discovered by David Silberberg in 1945. Silberberg was a First Lieutenant in the Combate and Counter-Intelligence Section of the 47th Infantry Regiment, 9th Infantry Division. Discarded papers were found by US troops and taken to Marburg Castle. Silberberg noticed that they had been signed off by the foreign minister of Nazi Germany, Joachim Ribbentrop.

Joachim von Ribbentrop

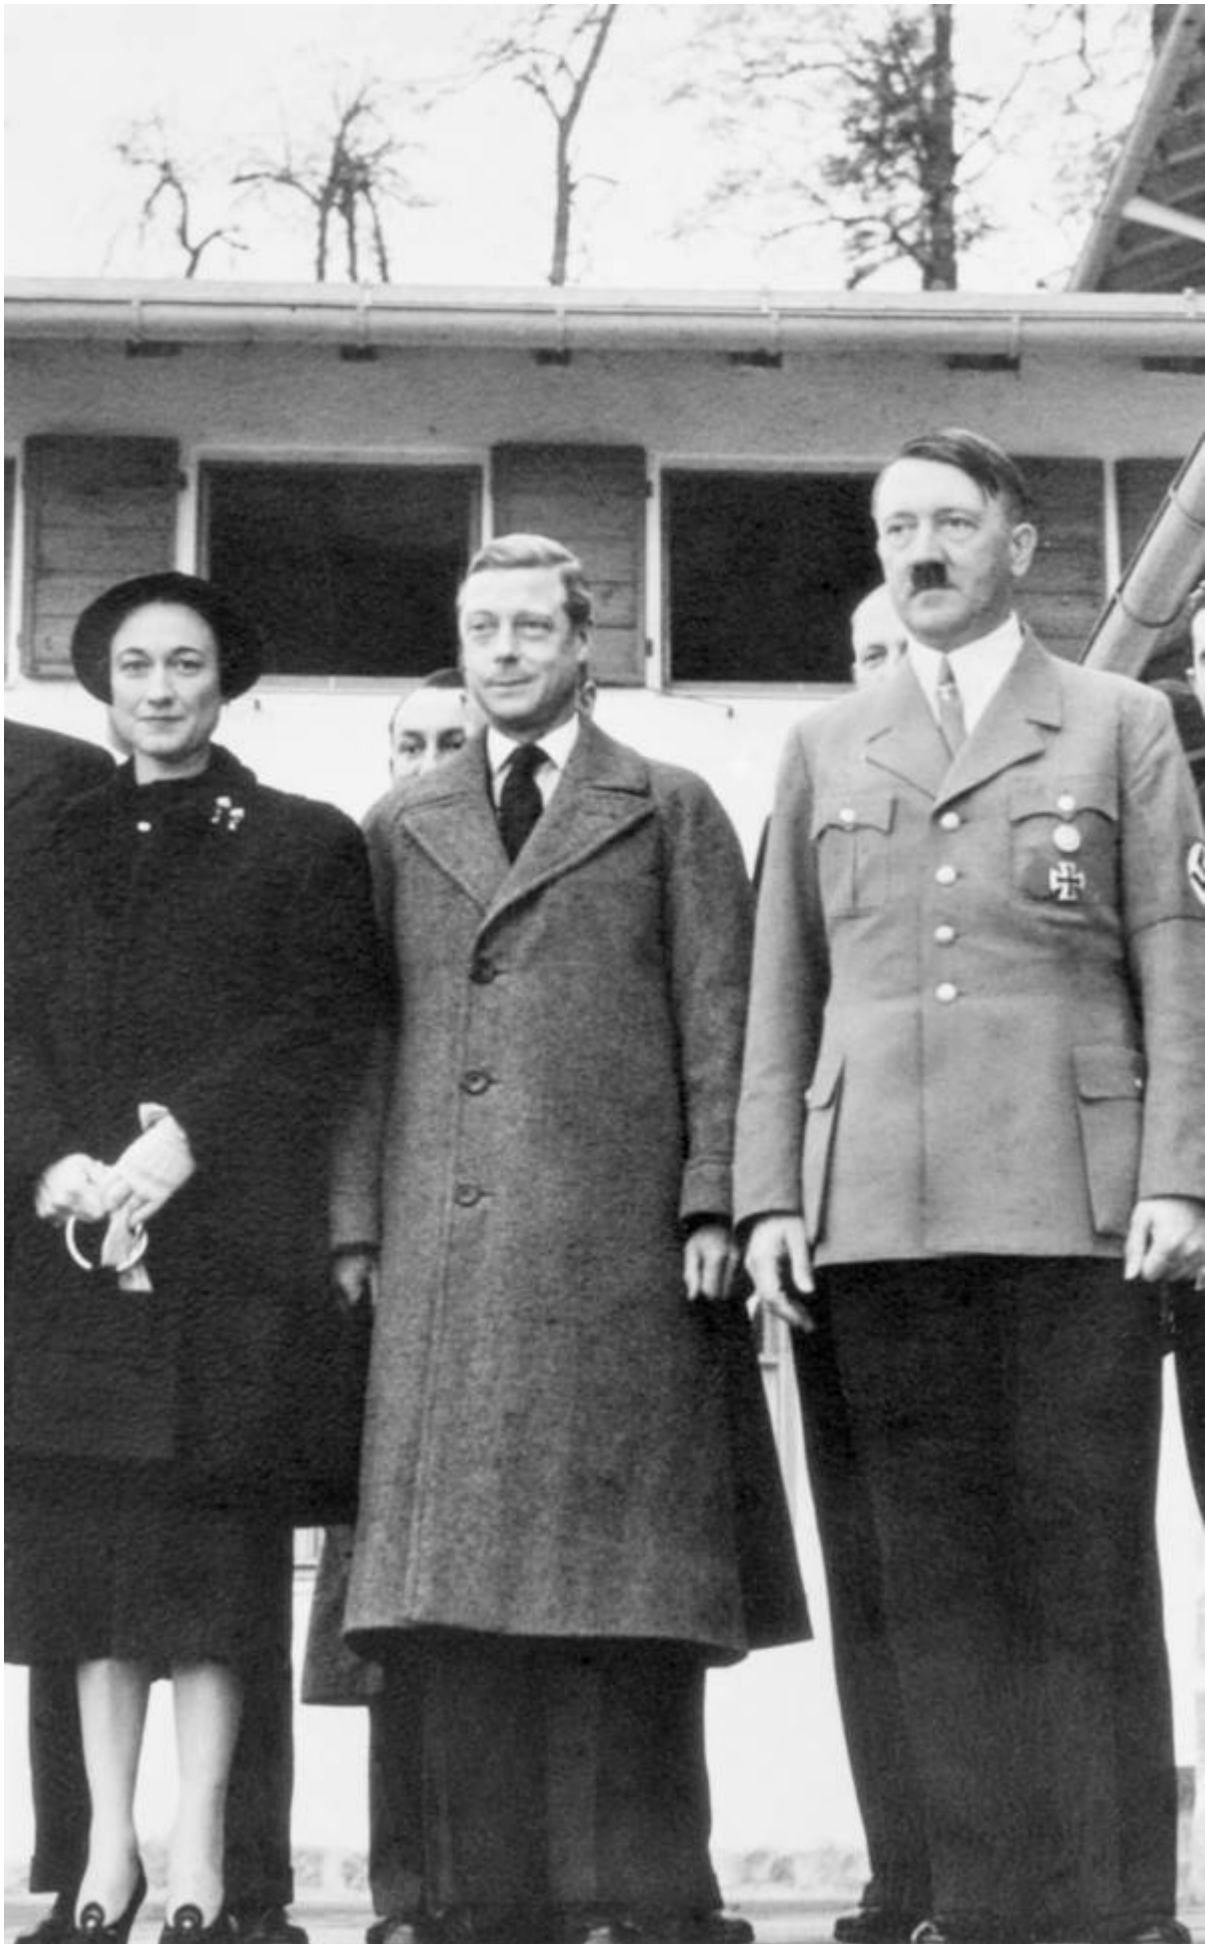

These files contained communications between the Nazis and the Duke of Windsor, Edward VIII. The documents would become known as the Marburg files.

The files were originally discovered by American troops at Schloss Marburg in Germany in May of 1945. All of the material was taken to Marburg Castle to be examined and after further inspection, the U.S. forces discovered that roughly 60 pages of the material contained information and correspondence between the Duke of Windsor and Nazi Germany. These documents consequently became known as the Windsor File.

The Windsor File provided definitive evidence of the Duke of Windsor's relationship with high-ranking Nazi officials and increased the suspicion that he was a Nazi sympathizer. One of the most shocking pieces of information that came out of the Marburg files was the detailed description of Germany's plan known as Operation Willi.

This was an ultimately unsuccessful plan by the Germans to kidnap the Duke and Duchess of Windsor and entice him to work alongside Hitler and the Nazis to either achieve peace between Britain and Germany or reinstate the Duke as Britain's king with the Duchess by his side.

One revelation in the Marburg Files was known as Operation Willi - a Nazi plan to kidnap the Duke and Duchess of Windsor so he could work with Hitler. The plan failed, but was it all a distraction? Could the Nazis and the Crown already be aligned, with Operation Willi acting as the designated failure?

(Duke of Windsor, Edward VIII and his wife Wallis Simpson with Hitler in 1937)

Source: <https://allthatsinteresting.com/marburg-files>

King George VI and Winston Churchill worked overtime to have the files suppressed at Marburg, where they stayed for a while until finally released in 1957. Allegedly, this caused a huge rift between Edward and the Royals.

This was the first in a long string of incidents that linked the Duke to Hitler and the Nazis, causing a huge rift between the duke and his family.

Rumors that the former king was a Nazi sympathizer ran rampant across the world. Once World War II officially began, the Duke became to his family a liability.

In the world of the Royals, optics are very important. To assume that the Duke of Windsor, Edward VIII, was a lone wolf, or traitor, and that the British Royal family were aghast at his secret dealings with Hitler, would be naive.

As we shall find later, the British Royal family were direct descendants of Germany royalty. When William III of Orange invaded England and took the crown, he oversaw the establishment of the Bank of England in 1694. The dynasty that would take over following his and Queen Anne's death were from the House of Hanover. The current UK Royals are from a German-nobility bloodline, with the Hanover nobility marrying into Prussian nobility.

Providing evidence that the Crown DID NOT consider Edward VIII a Nazi traitor or the black sheep of the family, he was allowed to freely engage with the family. Here he is teaching the future Queen Elizabeth II the Nazi salute back in the 1930s.

<https://www.timesofisrael.com/crown-fumes-over-video-of-queens-nazi-salute-as-child/>

Uncle Edward was not hiding his affinity with Nazi ideology. He seemed to be grooming the family to align with Nazism, with Operation Willi running decoy, as the designated failure. In the eyes of the public, this heinous possibility was thankfully extinguished. This Prussians were learning how to become invisible.

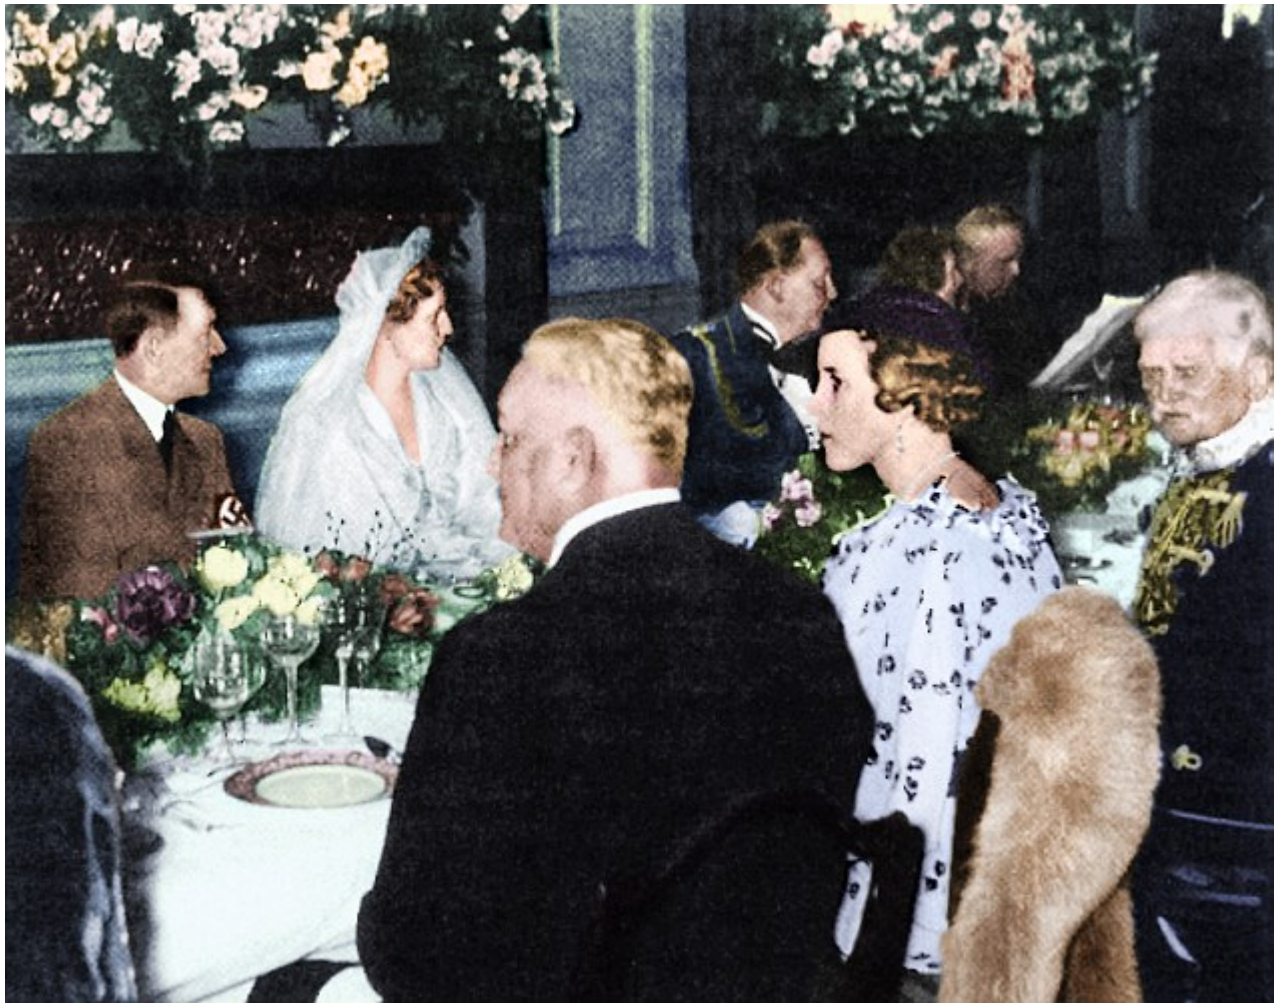

The young Princess Elizabeth can be forgiven for being led down the path of Nazism as a young child by a wayward uncle. Controlling children to become leaders is horrific and beyond the comprehension of most people who believe in democracy.

Notwithstanding the horrific nature of this Prussian-control, the future Queen of England had been prepared. Incredibly, her future husband also had a remarkable connection to the Nazis.

Sombre: Phillip, circled, is pictured with relatives wearing Nazi uniforms at his sister Cecile's funeral in Germany in 1937

Phillip's Nazi connections are numerous, as are his family relations. His sister was photographed in 1935 having lunch with Hitler and Hermann Goering. Phillip's family was deeply entrenched within Nazi Germany.

Source: <https://www.dailymail.co.uk/news/article-3167585/Philip-Nazi-funeral-day-sister-lunch-Hitler-TV-documentary-reopens-painful-chapter-duke-s-family-past.html>

It is also claimed that Edward VIII set up a back-channel communication line with Phillip, and Phillips grandfather – Lord Louis Mountbatten, who was one of the central figures in setting up the Nazi-British communications.

Philip's Relatives Work for the SS

The husband of Philip's sister Sophie, Prince Christoph, was embraced by the Nazis, who saw him as a channel to the appeasement faction in Britain epitomized by King Edward VIII. Joining the Nazi Party in 1933, by 1935 Prince Christoph was chief of the Forschungsamt (directorate of scientific research), a special intelligence operation run by Hermann Göring, and he was also Standartenführer (colonel) of the SS on Heinrich Himmler's personal staff.

The Forschungsamt used electronic intelligence-gathering methods to police the Nazi Party, while working with the Gestapo against the Catholic Church, the Jews, and labor organizations. When rumors of homosexuality spread against Capt. Ernst Roehm of the Stormtroopers, Himmler turned to the Forschungsamt's eavesdroppers, and ordered the "Night of the Long Knives" as a result.

The eldest of Prince Christoph and Sophie's children was named Karl Adolf, after Hitler.

Later, Prince Philip would promote his education.

Prince Christoph's brother, Philip of Hesse, married a daughter of the King of Italy, and became the official liaison between the Nazi and Fascist regimes.

Four years after Prince Philip left Schloss Salem to attend Gordonstoun Academy in Scotland, on Nov. 16, 1937, Philip learned that his sister Cecilia and her husband Georg Donatus, hereditary grand duke of Hesse-by-Rhine, had crashed in one of Göring's Junker aircraft on a trip to London for Georg's brother's wedding.

According to the British magazine Private Eye, the funeral became a gathering point for leading Nazis and their appeasers. Prince Philip himself developed secretive ties with King Edward VIII, continuing after Edward was deposed in 1938.

In fact, one of the central figures in the 1930s Nazi-British back-channel was Philip's uncle and sponsor, Lord Louis Mountbatten (originally, Battenberg, a branch of the House of Hesse). Until he was forced to abdicate, King Edward VIII enjoyed the full backing of "Dickie" Mountbatten.

Through much of World War II, secret channels of communication were maintained between the British royal family and their pro-Hitler cousins in Germany, by Lord Mountbatten, through his sister Louise, who was crown princess of pro-Nazi Sweden. Louise was Prince Philip's aunt.

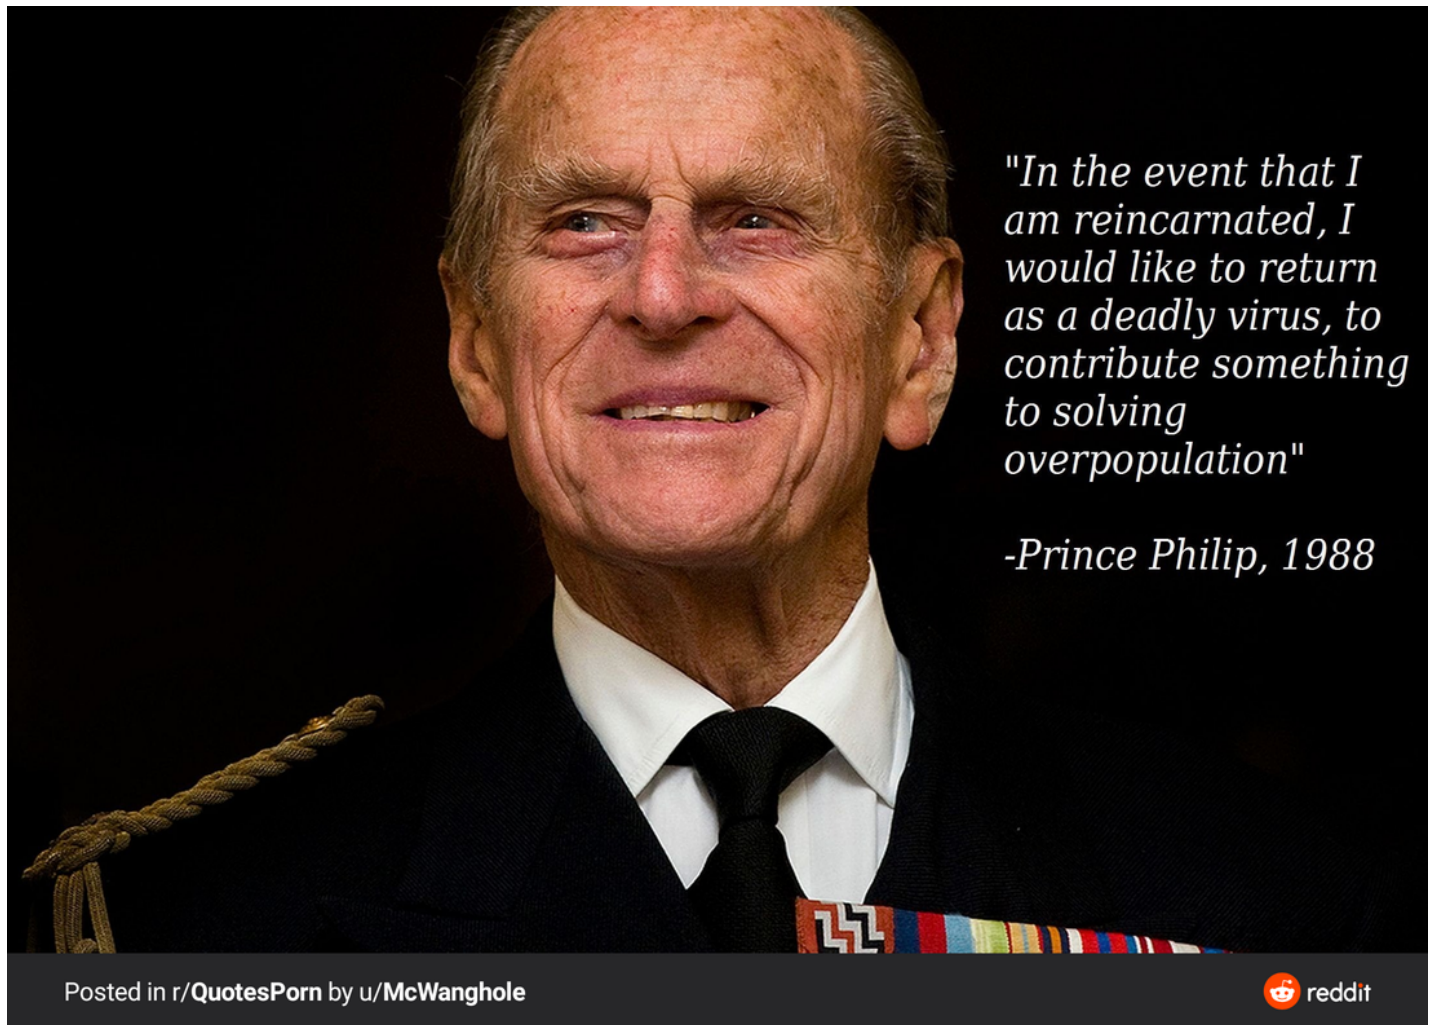

Although Buckingham Palace's rumor mill has tried to depict this wartime collaboration with the enemy as mere family correspondence, the channel apparently included messages from Prince Philip's secret ally, the Duke of Windsor (the former Edward VIII).

Source: https://www.bibliotecapleyades.net/sociopolitica/esp_sociopol_blacknobil09.htm

Phillip's connection to Nazi Germany, rumors of his communications with Edward VIII and the discovery of the "Marburg Files" in 1945 would certainly make him a national security threat? Well, not so much. In fact, he was now considered by the British Royal family as a potential suitor for the future Queen of England and the British Commonwealth.

In 1947, Elizabeth married her cousin, Prince Phillip.

In an extremely strange twist, in 1988, Prince Phillip stated he had a desire of returning as a deadly virus that kills off the world population. He died in April 2021. A few months later, the cross-dressing, dancing Tedros announced the deadly Marburg virus.

Prince Philip's odd connection to the Marburg Files, what do maniacal demons believe they are creating?

Marburg: The Plan

There is perhaps a more damning Marburg association: The Bolshevik Revolution.

The Bolshevik Red revolution in 1917 will be a topic requiring a much deeper dig. It could be considered the first color revolution; a part of a long and deliberate plan to destroy Russia from within. This chaos and death mirrored what was occurring throughout the world, particularly over the last century. Its seeds can be traced back to none other than Kaiser Wilhelm, and Prussia.

Lenin and Trotsky's 'revolution' was nothing other than a well-financed and contrived plan by extremely wealthy and powerful parties. The most prominent man at the time was Kaiser Wilhelm II, the King of Prussia - the Prince of Orange.

How Germany got the Russian Revolution off the ground

The Russian Revolution has gone down in history as the victory of the workers and peasants over the czarist rulers. Few people realize the German kaiser was also involved: He gave aid to the Bolsheviks in 1917.

In 1917, the narrative was that the Kaiser would de-stabilize Russia by aiding Lenin and Trotsky in their attempt to overthrow the Czar, and implement communism. The Kaiser agreed and Lenin leapt into action.

Prussian bayonets and Russian proletarian fists

Lenin's return to his home country was followed with great attention in Berlin.

"Lenin's entry into Russia was a success. He is working according to your wishes," was the message Germany's top army command sent to its Foreign Office.

A political paradox, or so it would seem: Kaiser Wilhelm II joining forces with the communist Lenin. The German emperor's aim was to finally undermine the czarist empire with which the so-called Central Powers - Germany and Austria-Hungary - had been at war since 1914.

For the Prussians, Lenin was nothing more than a useful idiot. However, like any good communist-revolutionary, Lenin knew the 'People's Revolution' would never work unless it had lots of cash to support it. In a paradox that exists in today's 'woke' world, Lenin looked for funds. The Kaiser opened up the German imperial treasury:

The Russian revolution in 23 pages

The Russian communist, with his journalistic background in Germany and business success in Constantinople, wrote the script of a revolution for the Foreign Office. It was a roadmap for what actually happened just a few months later. Over 23 typed pages, Gelfand detailed how a foreign-backed coup could be successful. For him, it was a question of money, sabotage, and toppling the government. One month later the German imperial treasury approved 2 million marks "to support revolutionary propaganda in Russia."

Read more: The historical turning point: Revisiting the Russian Revolution

Gelfand was also active in a personal capacity. There was hardly any separation between his business interests and his political aims. He was the classic war profiteer, dealing with everything and everyone: arms, metals, cognac, caviar, cloth. The road to the east was blocked by the fighting, so his aides smuggled goods via a Swedish village on the border with Finland, which at the time was a grand duchy within the Russian Empire, and paid bribes to the border guards.

Wilhelm II, middle, opened the purse strings to weaken his enemy

However, 2 million marks would not cut it. This grass roots movement of communism needed some really serious coin. The plan was hatched to get it from a place with very deep pockets: Wall St.

Evidence already published by George Katkov, Stefan Possony, and Michael Futrell has established that the return to Russia of Lenin and his party of exiled Bolsheviks, followed a few weeks later by a party of Mensheviks, was financed and organized by the German government. [1] The necessary funds were transferred in part through the Nya Banken in Stockholm, owned by Olof Aschberg, and the dual German objectives were: (a) removal of Russia from the war, and (b) control of the postwar Russian market. [2]

We have now gone beyond this evidence to establish a continuing working relationship between Bolshevik banker Olof Aschberg and the Morgan-controlled Guaranty Trust Company in New York before, during, and after the Russian Revolution. In tsarist times Aschberg was the Morgan agent in Russia and negotiator for Russian loans in the United States; during 1917 Aschberg was financial intermediary for the revolutionaries; and after the revolution Aschberg became head of Ruskombank, the first Soviet international bank, while Max May, a vice president of the Morgan-controlled Guaranty Trust, became director and chief of the Ruskombank foreign department. We have presented documentary evidence of a continuing working relationship between the Guaranty Trust Company and the Bolsheviks. The directors of Guaranty Trust in 1917 are listed in Appendix 1.

The Guaranty Trust was set up by J.P. Morgan. However, there were far more Wall St. players involved in the raising of funds for Lenin and Trotsky, [surprisingly] with German sources continually being found on every corner.

Moreover, there is evidence of transfers of funds from Wall Street bankers to international revolutionary activities. For example, there is the statement (substantiated by a cablegram) by William Boyce Thompson -- a director of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, a large stockholder in the Rockefeller-controlled Chase Bank, and a financial associate of the Guggenheims and the Morgans -- that he (Thompson) contributed $1 million to the Bolshevik Revolution for propaganda purposes. Another example is John Reed, the American member of the Third International executive committee who was financed and supported by Eugene Boissevain, a private New York banker, and who was employed by Harry Payne Whitney's Metropolitan magazine. Whitney was at that time a director of Guaranty Trust. We also established that Ludwig Martens, the first Soviet "ambassador" to the United States, was (according to British Intelligence chief Sir Basil Thompson) backed by funds from Guaranty Trust Company. In tracing Trotsky's funding in the U.S. we arrived at German sources, yet to be identified, in New York. And though we do not know the precise German sources of Trotsky's funds, we do know that Von Pavenstedt, the chief German espionage paymaster in the U.S., was also senior partner of Amsinck & Co. Amsinck was owned by the ever-present American International Corporation -- also controlled by the J.P. Morgan firm.

As a side note, the same structure was used to finance Sun Yat-sen in China. The revolution that led to the eventual rise of Mao.

Further, Wall Street firms including Guaranty Trust were involved with Carranza's and Villa's wartime revolutionary activities in Mexico. We also identified documentary evidence concerning a Wall Street syndicate's financing of the 1912 Sun Yat-sen revolution in China, a revolution that is today hailed by the Chinese Communists as the precursor of Mao's revolution in China. Charles B. Hill, New York attorney negotiating with Sun Yat-sen in behalf of this syndicate, was a director of three Westinghouse subsidiaries, and we have found that Charles R. Crane of Westinghouse in Russia was involved in the Russian Revolution.

This leaves one obvious question: Why would a group of hardcore banking free-market capitalists have a vested interest in financing the world into communism, seemingly at the risk of having their own wealth confiscated by the communist ideology?

This is the very nature of the plan hatched by the banksters: The Marburg Plan.

The Marburg Plan

The Marburg Plan, financed by Andrew Carnegie's ample heritage, was produced in the early years of the twentieth century. It suggests premeditation for this kind of superficial schizophrenia, which in fact masks an integrated program of power acquisition: "What then if Carnegie and his unlimited wealth, the international financiers and the Socialists, could be organized in a movement to compel the formation of a league to enforce peace." [8]

The plan was one of signalled virtue. The cooperation of the bankers and the socialists would be able to ENFORCE peace. Enforced peace is an irony not too dissimilar in today's dystopic happenings. But, how would this be achieved?

The governments of the world, according to the Marburg Plan, were to be socialized while the ultimate power would remain in the hands of the international financiers "to control its councils and enforce peace [and so] provide a specific for all the political ills of mankind." [9]

And so was born the idea of Governments socializing with the aid of international financiers. Considering that this was before the idea of the central Federal Reserve banking system, the international financiers of yester-year, would be known as our central bankers, today.

This claim was written in 1974 (could not find source. Be more specific), just as the world banking system was departing from the Gold Standard. Rather than criticize this claim, observe the actions of governments, the uber-wealthy elite and central bankers and ask yourself if the claim has any merit.

Note: the author of the Marburg Plan, Antony C. Sutton, was highly persecuted for his claims but never prosecuted. Considering the defamatory nature of the claims, one would think such accusations would be vigorously contested in court. They were never challenged.

Marburg is mentioned yet again. This time in a plan to enforce peace through revolutions into socialism and financed by the world's wealthy elite.

What's Next Marburg?

I've got nothing against Marburg. In fact, it looks like a beautifully quaint Prussian town.

However, when the Director-General of the WHO, a devout Marxist with direct ties to an Ethiopian terrorist organization, and ties to Bill Gates' GAVI Alliance, declare that the Marburg Virus could be the next world pandemic, we must all ask the question – WTF are they talking about and what are they planning?

We should also ask, how serious are their plans?

Humanity must now ask some very urgent and serious questions:

- Is the incoming Marburg Virus the same one that was first discovered at the University of Marburg after people in a lab were fiddling with African green monkeys?

- Is the incoming Marburg Virus the dreadful Thirty Years' War where Marburg's population was decimated by the Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse and saw the entire Old European Order "reset", resulting in the rise of the Prussian empire to prominence?
- Is the incoming Marburg Virus referring to the global Marxist revolutionary movement, with its deep Marxist roots into the university in Marburg?
- Is the incoming Marburg Virus referring to the original fairy tales of Brothers' Grimm which refer to red shoes, child abuse, pedophilia, necrophilia, cannibalism and murder?
- Is the incoming Marburg Virus referring to power of the Crown and the obvious connection the British royal family had with Nazi Germany?
- Is the incoming Marburg Virus perhaps referring to all of the above; signalling the elite to mobilize the central banks to debt-finance sovereign nations into a socialist descent; also known as the New World Order?

The patterns of Prussia cannot be escaped. As the Horrible Invisible Enemy comes into full view, the smart-money is on the Patriots who knew long ago of the of the maniacal Providence of Prussia.

We are in an invisible war, expressing itself as an information war.

But what if the enemy is no longer invisible? What if humanity could see the once-invisible enemy?

Once we understand how to win; we will win. This is #PrussiaGate.

Here is Trump speaking openly about the "Horrible Invisible Enemy":

An invisible hand sits behind humanity, exerting control over the human will. This hidden virus scours the earth, looking for hosts who will adopt its ideology, and wage war against dissenters. You cannot leave a captivity that you cannot see.

I was on train with Devolution from the very first part. And i still am for part 1 - 13. But part 14 worries me a bit, and I mean genuine worry. Lets be honest, by now it has become very obvious to everyone who is awake, atleast on a personal and mental level, who are actually controlling all the media, the public discourse, the moral judgement in culture, what can-be-said, and what-cannot-be-said, all of our international, and national financial institutions, and as Devolution Part 14 clearly indicates — even our secret societies. Ofcourse, i'm reasonable and thankful to Patel Patriot. Therefore, I can easily acknowledge that naming [[[them]]] is hard — maybe even too hard in current times. But to blame this part on the noble Prussian (Polish / German) people? The finest Germans who descended from the tribe of Judah of the real people of Israel? Really... Let me explain the injustice of this: Trump = German and Prussian by his very own blood and genes. But who are mentioned in part 14? Jeffrey Epstein, David Rubenstein, George Soros, Larry Fink and Ghislaine Maxwell. Hmm.. are we really to believe these names are German? Russian? American? Christian even? What would be another label that [[[they]]] all share? Hint: Talmud. Another hint: John 8:44. Yet another hint: Revelation 2:9. Got it? One more? Revelation 3:9. Okay one final hint: Revelations 18:23. Name them — name them — name them. They have stolen our sacred heritage, the covenant of YHWH with the real people of Israel, the European men, women and children. Google 100 proofs the Israelites were...
