1918: The “Fall” of Hohenzollern; the Rise of the Invisible Enemy

On the 11th hour of the 11th day of the 11th month in 1918, the Allied powers and Germany signed an armistice.

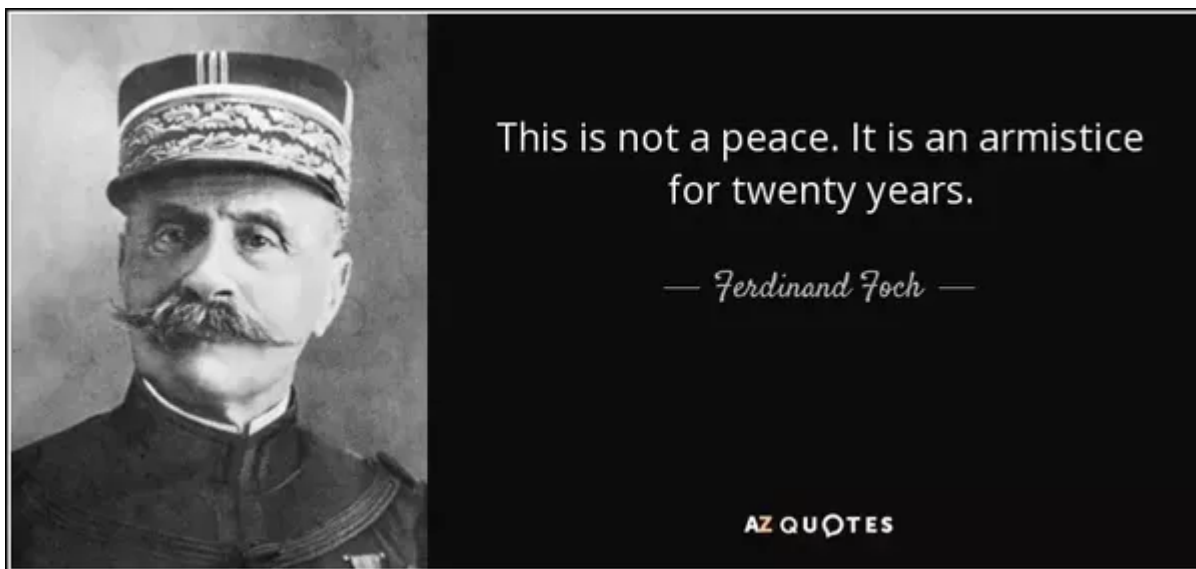

It is hardly surprising that Germany would lose the war. The disastrous Schlieffen Plan (Part 2) had Germany on a kamikaze mission that was doomed to destroy the nation and inflict horrific damage on the world at the same time.

For the Allied powers, Armistice Day was a great victory. The Kaiser and all royal families of the German Empire abdicated and a democratic Weimar Republic was established. It was the first time ever that Germans would need to vote for their leaders.

The Kaiser fled Germany for the safety of the Netherlands, where he sought asylum. The Dutch Queen Wilhelmina, from the house of Orange, granted the Kaiser’s request. This seemed reasonable, after all, as he was her cousin.

The loss of WWI was a national humiliation. To rub salt into the wound, the Versaille Treaty was considered a complete joke. The cost of reparations would force the German people into multi-generational bankruptcy. This was never going to end well.

French Marshall General Ferdinand Foch understood the nature of the Versaille Treaty and that another war is in the making. His prediction was Nostradamic.

On the other hand, the new globalist bankers were salivating at the prospect of a bankrupted Germany. Future fiat-maestro John Maynard Keynes thought it best to take everything from the German people.

Germany is liable up to the full extent of the injury she has caused to the Allied and Associated Nations.... The Allied and Associated Governments demand accordingly that Germany render payment for the injury which she has caused up to the full limit of her capacity.... Germany shall hand over immediately (a) the whole of her mercantile marine, (b) the whole of her gold and silver coin and bullion in the Reichsbank and all other banks; (c) the whole of the foreign property of her nationals situated outside Germany, including all foreign securities, foreign properties and business and concessions.

American financiers would also find ways to profit immensely from the looming German bankruptcy.

1924: The Dawes Plan

The Treaty of Versailles after World War I imposed a heavy reparations burden on defeated Germany. This financial burden — a real cause of the German discontent that led to acceptance of Hitlerism — was utilized by the international bankers for their own benefit. The opportunity to float profitable loans for German cartels in the United States was presented by the Dawes Plan and later the Young Plan. Both plans were engineered by these central bankers, who manned the committees for their own pecuniary advantages, and although technically the committees were not appointed by the U.S. Government, the plans were in fact approved and sponsored by the Government.

We will unpack the details of these deals later, but it is clear that the financial conditions set upon the German people after World War I would lead to total ruin.

The Schlieffen Plan was a disaster. Baiting America into war was a disaster. The Treaty of Versailles was a disaster. How had the Prussian kingdom that dominated strategic warfare and diplomacy in Europe for centuries, suddenly become so incompetent?

Ludendorff Chess

As stated in Part 2, from 1916 until the end of the Great War on November 11, 1918, Germany was in a de-facto military dictatorship. Every aspect of German life was controlled by three men. Within this structure, General Erich Ludendorff controlled the Reichswehr. When Germany surrendered, Ludendorff resigned. His resignation, however, was just a clever Prussian paper shuffle. He would continue to operate in the shadows as the supreme commander; but he was now invisible to the world.

Ludendorff is possibly the most important character in this entire investigation. His philosophy, words and actions were behind everything that would eventually transpire in Germany.

History would judge him as a rambling anti-semitic, anti-communist and a sore loser. He was remembered as an incompetent General who became such a violent right-wing extremist that even Hitler distanced himself from him. Behind the scenes, a much bigger game was being played.

Ludendorff Philosophy

By now it should be clear that Prussian culture was to mobilize every citizen in service to the State. When Prussia lost a war to Napoleon in 1806, the University of Berlin effectively declared that children were now wards of the State and to be indoctrinated as Prussia saw fit.

“The new education must consist essentially in this, that it completely destroys freedom of will ... If you want to influence him [the student] at all, you must do more than merely talk to him; you must fashion him, and fashion him in such a way that he simply cannot will otherwise than you wish him to will.” — Johann Gottlieb Fichte, “Second Address to the German Nation,” 1807 —

As we outlined in Prussian Origins of Modern Education, this controlling ideology is now the model of today’s education system.

Ludendorff would take the Prussian notion of citizens serving the State to its extreme. His book, not published until 1935, would explain what he was thinking all along. He wanted every industrial complex and every citizen to be mobilized, operating in “lockstep” for one sole purpose. That purpose was total war.

To achieve this goal, every man, woman and child would be required to collectively submit to an ideology of militant hatred. In time, Ludendorff's vision would come to fruition.

Ludendorff Words

After the signing of the Versailles Treaty, Erich Ludendorff went completely off the rails. He refused to accept that Germany lost the war on the battlefield. Instead, he claimed Germany was betrayed by Berlin's politicians and socialist revolutionaries, many of whom were Jewish. This became known as the "stab in the back theory", or Dolchstoßlegende. It was this claim, from the top commanding general in the nation, that planted the seeds of hatred that would later be taken advantage of by Hitler.

In the aftermath of WWI, a German Revolution took place which established the communist party as a formidable political force. In these early days of the Weimar Republic, society was effectively run by radical leftists. Ludendorff predicted that Germany would collapse and that these leftist political parties would be held responsible. In the end, the German people would destroy them.

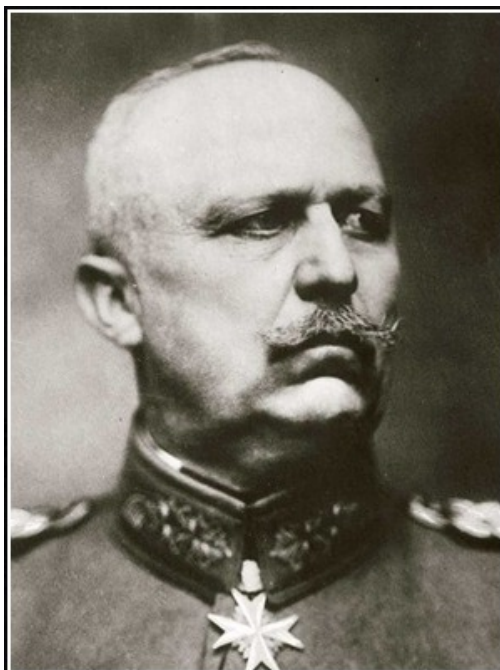

By the Revolution the Germans have made themselves pariahs among the nations, incapable of winning allies, helots in the service of foreigners and foreign capital, and deprived of all self-respect. In twenty years' time, the German people will curse the parties who now boast of having made the Revolution.

Lastly, Ludendorff became a staunch anti-semite. However, he did not stop at the Jews; he would wage war against anything that might lead to peace.

I decline Christianity because it is Jewish, because it is international, and because, in cowardly fashion, it preaches Peace on Earth.

AZ QUOTES

During WWI, Ludendorff became the most respected man in Germany. Millions would look to his inspiration and guidance as the humiliation and cost of the Great War set in. The General would use his public influence for one purpose only; to attribute blame.

When Hitler finally came to power about 14 years later, Ludendorff's philosophy and accusations would be ingrained into the collective German consciousness.

Ludendorff Actions

Philosophy and vitriolic words are one thing, but Ludendorff was not a man of empty words. He was a man of action and he was rolling out an aggressive plan.

To get the party started, he created a division of military intelligence known as the “enlightened commandos”. Central intelligence was infiltrating German politics. Hitler was an early recruit.

Hitler was devastated by the German surrender and the armistice of November 1918. Like many of his comrades in the Imperial German army, Hitler was convinced Germany could still have won the war. The surrender, he believed, was the work of liberal and socialist politicians who had stabbed their country in the back (he later described this group as “November criminals”).

At the war’s end, Hitler was intent on remaining in the army. In the spring of 1918, he accepted a posting to the ‘Enlightened Commandos’, a newly formed unit tasked with sniffing out suspected communists and infiltrating small political groups.

<https://alphahistory.com/nazigermany/adolph-hitler/>

This commando unit was allegedly created under the ‘Abwehr’ to help in the defence against military espionage. The Abwehr was the German military-intelligence service for the Reichswehr.

The Treaty of Versailles prohibited the Weimar Republic from establishing an intelligence organization of their own. This commando structure meant they were not violating the Versailles Treaty. The commando unit would be used to infiltrate as many political parties as possible.

Adolph Hitler’s boss was Captain Karl Mayr. Mayr recruited many others just like Adolph Hitler for his infiltration program. The infamous Gemlich letter shows that Karl Mayr was managing multiple field agents, all with similar tasks to Hitler.

In September 1919, Mayr ordered Hitler to join the German Worker's Party (DAP). After attending a few meetings, Hitler joined the DAP. The official story is that Hitler joined the DAP full time and was discharged from the military in March 1920. However, in Karl Mayr's own words, Hitler did not resign from the Reichswehr until June 1920 and stayed in the military barracks until that time.

then as a lumber room. He seemed to be happy in this cubicle, and stayed there until he had to resign from the Reichswehr on June 10, 1920.

<https://marcuse.faculty.history.ucsb.edu/projects/hitler/sources/40s/41currhist/41vCurrHistHitlersBoss.htm>

Mayr even paid Hitler to assist in his mission.

Members of the Reichswehr were not allowed to join political parties, but to please Ludendorff, whose wishes were still respected in the Reichswehr, I ordered Hitler to join the Workers Party, and help to foster its growth. He was allowed at first the equivalent of twenty gold marks in the current inflation money weekly for this purpose.

Notice that Mayr mentions Ludendorff by name. Mayr states that Ludendorff personally ordered him to have Hitler join the DAP and grow it. He honored this request out of respect for the General. The only problem was that Ludendorff was no longer a part of the Reichswehr. Do you remember? He had resigned his post.

Why is all this important?

Hitler may have resigned from the military, but he was still being paid by Captain Mayr. This detail reveals that he was a covert military agent operating inside a political party. The true role of the “enlightened commandos” comes into view. While technically this was illegal, Hitler’s role as a ‘contractor’ to the central intelligence apparatus, was a way around those pesky Treaties.

Furthermore, Mayr claimed to still be receiving orders from Ludendorff, again revealing that Ludendorff was still running the Reichswehr, or at least parts of it.

Just like Hitler, Mayr had other field agents infiltrating all the political parties. All of this intelligence information was available to Ludendorff, upon his request.

This model is beginning to look strangely familiar. It truly was “infiltration instead of invasion”.

Ludendorff was running an invisible military operation. Welcome to the origins of the shadow government.

Order Out of Chaos

What exactly was this shadow military operation that Ludendorff appeared to be running?

By infiltrating political groups with covert agents, unsuspecting members could be radicalized into committing acts of violence. Having crazed activists terrorizing the German people could eventually be used as a political pretext, where a “strong man” or savior would be needed to solve the desperate situation Germans would find themselves in.

Once Hitler had infiltrated the DAP, he set about building it up as quickly as possible.

In the next few weeks Hitler brought several members of his army into the party, including one of his commanding officers, Captain Ernst Röhm. The arrival of Röhm was an important development as he had access to the army political fund and was able to transfer some of the money into the GWP. Other early members included future Nazi leaders Rudolf Hess, Hans Frank and Alfred Rosenberg.

<https://www.jewishvirtuallibrary.org/background-and-overview-of-the-nazi-party-nsdap>

With money pouring into the DAP, Hitler had the name changed to NSDAP, which would later become the Nazi Party. He was also able to build his own private army, known as the “Sturmabteilung”, “SA” or “Storm Division”.

The SA was founded in Munich by Hitler in 1921 out of various roughneck elements that had attached themselves to the fledgling Nazi movement. It drew its early membership largely from the Freikorps \(Free Corps\), armed freebooter groups, made up largely of ex-soldiers, that battled leftists in the streets in the early days of the Weimar Republic.

<https://www.britannica.com/topic/SA-Nazi-organization>

For maximum civil unrest, Hitler’s SA would need worthy opponents to fight on the streets. Given that Captain Karl Mayr’s mission had infiltrated numerous radical political groups, that could no-doubt be easily arranged.

Ludendorff would not just promote unending war; he was the man behind Mayr and the political chaos that was planned to occur between radicalized political groups. As we will unpack in later parts, he would also act as broker between the world’s largest corporations and the political parties they fund.

Germany was about to be fed to the wolves. Fortunes would be created, while the nation would fall into an abyss so deep, that the people would eventually look to one man for salvation.

The order of Hitler would only come from the chaos that preceded it.

This series is fantastic! And you answered a question I've long wondered about who was "behind" Hitler. The misconception I had for years is he "came along at the right time and had the right message for Germany" which isn't quite true. This really shines the light on how he was chosen to do what he did.

It almost makes me wonder if Ludendorff and his pals from WW1 were under some sort of possession. It's one thing to be a megalomaniac, but a whole other thing when wholesale slaughter and perpetual chaos and destruction is their goal.
