In Urania - Part 4 we highlighted the horrific mind-control research taking place in Nazi Germany, and introduced Operation Paperclip. Urania - Part 5 noted that the US Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) was probably funding projects abroad, to avoid scrutiny within the US.

Urania - Part 7 closed out the series with a chilling enquiry: “Are corporations, with the full endorsement of the state, creating a new, immensely profitable market of future transgenders?”

Is humanity entering a war against globalist corporations?

This series will explore the origins of Operation Paperclip, but with a focus on its coordination from inside the US government, in partnership with monopolistic corporations who were already influential inside the US government.

This first article will reveal that Operation Paperclip was not the start of US infiltration, but evidence of an already-embedded enemy that is continually trying to subvert the freedom of ‘We the People’, provided by their Constitution.

HITLER’S CHEMIST

Operation Paperclip ¹ was a classified program to bring Nazi scientists to America immediately after World War II. It had an innocent enough public face – Advanced space and rocket programs which were essential to match those of the Soviet Union. This series will inquire whether Paperclip may have been something far larger.

Before we start, there is an important context that is relevant to much of what was taking place at this point in history. In 1947, America established legislation to form an agency that could deal with threats of national security:

The National Security Act of 1947

The 1947 National Security Act (NSA) is one of the most important pieces of legislation in modern American history. It created most of the institutions of the US national security bureaucracy, including the Air Force, the Central Intelligence Agency, and the National Security Council. It created the National Military Establishment, which became the Department of Defense in 1949, and it gave statutory identity to the US Joint Chiefs of Staff.

With legislation to protect national security, and the context of war still fresh in the minds of the people, the idea of bringing Nazi scientists into the country seemed acceptable, provided it kept them safe from the Russians.

The Nazi scientist who will kick off our story, is Dr. Otto Ambros. Annie Jacobsen is a pre-eminent author on this topic, and we used her research efforts as a starting point for our own research:

The journalist Annie Jacobsen recently published Operation Paperclip: The Secret Intelligence Program that Brought Nazi Scientists to America (Little Brown, 2014). Scouring the archives and unearthing previously undisclosed records as well as drawing on earlier work, Jacobsen recounts in chilling detail a very peculiar effort on the part of the U.S. military to utilize the very scientists who had been essential to Hitler's war effort.

Otto Ambros I must say was one of the most dark-hearted characters that I wrote about in this book. He was Hitler's favorite chemist, and I don't say that lightly. I found a document in the National Archives, I don't believe it had ever been revealed before, that showed that during the war Hitler gave Ambros a one million Reichsmark bonus for his scientific acumen. The reason was two-fold. Ambros worked on the Reich's secret nerve agent program, but he also invented synthetic rubber, that was called buna. The reason rubber was so important — if you think about the Reich's war-machine and how tanks need treads, aircraft need wheels — the Reich needed rubber. By inventing synthetic rubber, Ambros became Hitler's favorite chemist.

3

Let us formally introduce “Hitler’s favorite chemist”:

(Source: CIA CREST Database) 4

The above CIA image confirms that Ambros was known to the US government, as was his expertise in poisonous gas and synthetic rubber.

It also appears that these Nazi scientists were not exactly being ‘squirrelled away’ deep in the basement of the CIA building. Otto Ambros was known to be an IG Farben executive, and he was at the top of a hand-written list being compiled by the US Bureau of Mines:

5

The Bureau of Mines was essentially the fore-runner to the US Department of Energy (DOE), which was opened in 1977. When the Bureau of Mines was shut in 1995 most of its operations moved over to the DOE. Does this list, compiled by the Bureau of Mines, suggest that these scientists were of interest to the broader US bureaucracy? Was their research potentially influencing energy and weapons development?

Much of the following evidence we provide comes from a declassified 1959 CIA report. This report is significant in terms of understanding the extent of Nazi infiltration. Throughout this series, we will let this report do much of the talking.

Let's go right to the Nuremberg defendants, and look at their associations with the infamous chemical cartel – IG Farben:

The list of the defendants included some persons known to the whole world: Hermann Schmitz -- chairman of the board of I. G. Farben and successor to its deceased head, Duisberg; his nephew, Max Ilgner, member of the board and financial director, head of the I. G. Farben's spy network abroad, the organizer of the seizure of foreign enterprises, inveterate Fascist, bosom friend of Goebbels; Hoerlein, member of the board of the company -- organizer of the production of poison gas, immediately responsible for the death of hundreds of prisoners used in the brutal experiments; Otto Ambros, member of the board, Chief of the Toxic Substances Branch of the Nazi Ministry of Armaments, and Director of the I. G. Farben plant in Oswiecim. Behind these "leaders" came Fritz ter Meer, Butefisch, Gattineau, Gajewski, directors, managers, consultants, and so forth.

The defendants' guilt was proven in the trial with great completeness. The peoples expected that they would be given severe sentences. But they were deceived in their expectations.

"The council of the gods" had nothing to fear -- because it was tried by an American military tribunal. All the defendants were found not guilty.

7

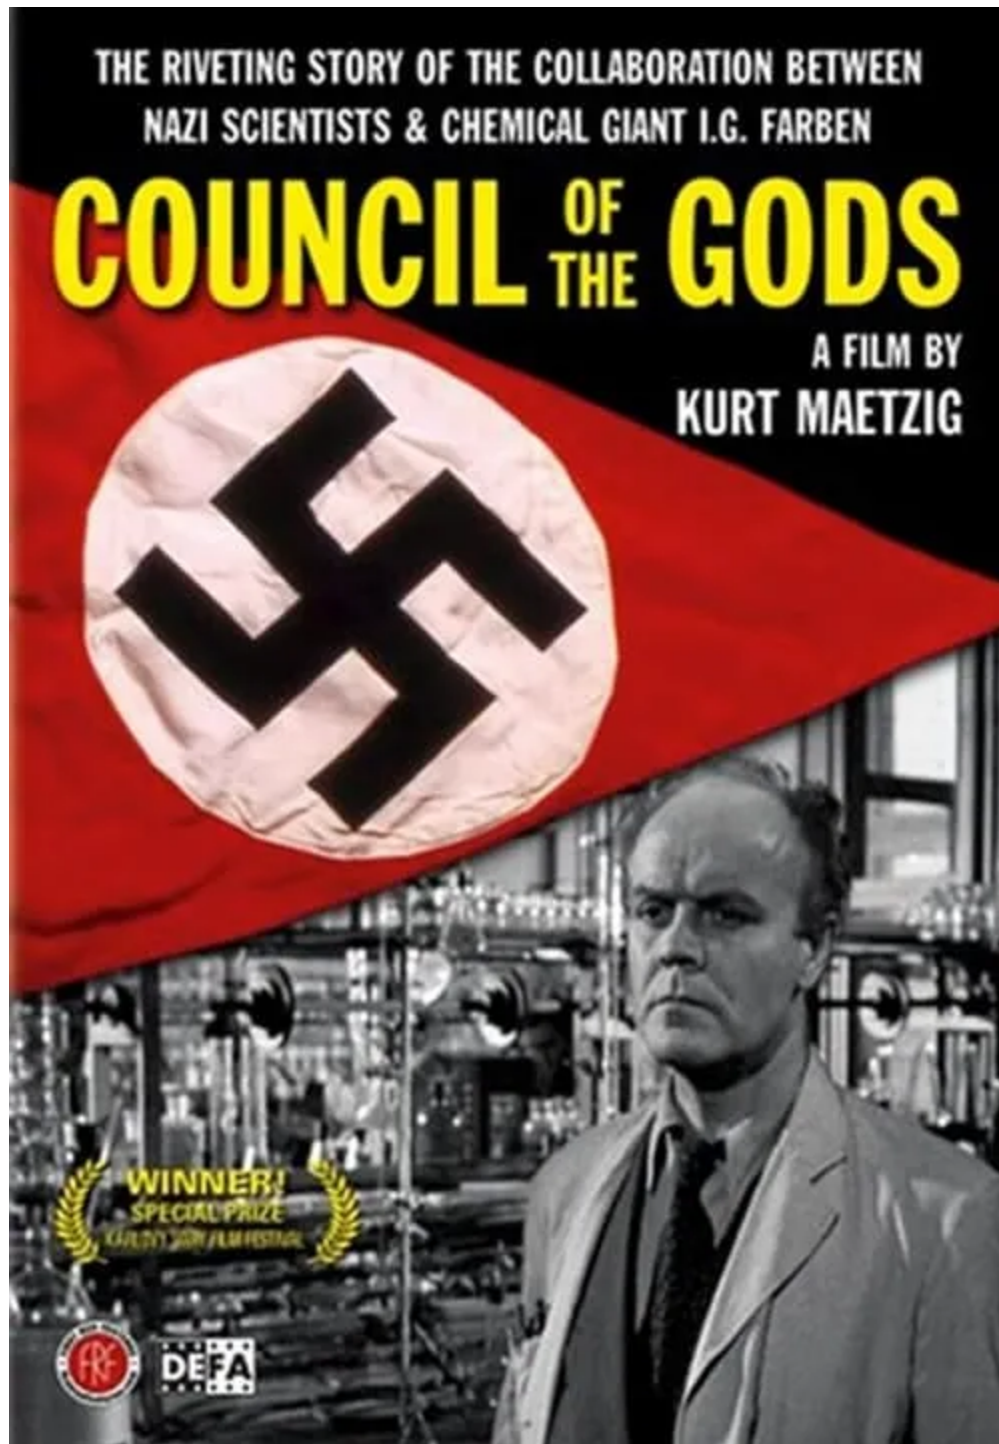

This first screenshot provides detail that will set the direction for this entire series.

The first detail is that Max Ilgner was running IG Farben's spy network "abroad"; AND it could seize foreign enterprises; AND he was a Fascist.

Secondly, we can finally see why Otto Ambros was referred to as Hitler's favorite chemist: He was on the Board of IG Farben; he was the Chief of the Toxic Substances Branch of the Nazi Ministry of Armaments; he was the head of an IG Farben plant in Germany. This guy was a serious high achiever!

Thirdly, and most-notably, the above text introduces us to "the council of the gods". It seems that those who were on the "council of the gods" were found not guilty by an American Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, despite their guilt having been proven with "great completeness".

As an aside, there is a 1950 East German movie titled, “Council of the gods”, which lays out much this story. The plot suggests that the authors of this film appear to have been genuinely trying to reveal what had just taken place.

Not surprisingly, the “council of the gods” led directly back to one of our favorite Prussian corporations – IG Farben. The IG in the name has a very intriguing meaning:

Interessengemeinschaft

FEMININE NOUN

1. community of interests; (= Menschen) group of people sharing interests
2. (ECON) syndicate

9

Its full German name is in the source link, however it could be translated “Syndicate of Dyestuff-Industry Corporations”. IG Farben was the world’s largest chemical cartel.

Obviously, IG Farben no longer exists, but did their breaking up end their influence?

From the very first day of the supposed splitting up of the company, the successors of I. G. Farben have in reality acted jointly. The “council of the gods” has been established again. As in earlier times, it has considerable influence in determining the policies of West Germany.

10

The activities of IG Farben (noted as “I.G.F” in the article below) seemed well known to the CIA:

In its quest for cheap labor, the company established its plants directly in the death camps. One of the plants was located in Oswiecim. The prisoners working there served as the subjects of brutal experiments. In its laboratories was created one of the most powerful toxic substances -- the death-dealing gas "tabun". To determine the effectiveness of this gas, the company's management ordered that it be tested upon the prisoners in the camp.

Dr. Fritz ter Meer, a member of the management of I. G. F., was later asked whether it was possible to defend performing these experiments upon living people. Ter Meer explained in cold blood that it made no difference to the prisoners what they died from -- from beating or from gas.

The company was directed by a small group of administrators and large stockholders. It was called the "council of the gods". After the defeat of Fascism, this "council" was put on trial.

11

There are a few things to look at here, which we've highlighted in red:

1. Brutal, inhumane experiments were carried out at Oswiecim, which is the Farben plant where Otto Ambros was the Director.
2. The "council of the gods" were a secret group directing the IG Farben cartel, and they were also Fascists. The CIA report provided more detail here, describing the "council" as a "small group of administrators and large stockholders".

How were the "council of the gods" found not guilty by the US military? This series will hopefully shine some light on this question. Before we do, some dates and details will help establish some critical context which will help understand what took place here.

The Nürnberg or Nuremberg Trials were a series of trials held initially in 1945-46, in which twenty-four (24) former Nazi leaders were indicted and tried as war criminals by the International Military Tribunal. For those wondering, there were twenty-two (22) convictions. Of those not convicted, one committed suicide while in prison, and another's mental and physical condition was too bad. Of the twenty-two (22) convictions, three (3) were acquitted; four (4) were sentenced to terms of imprisonment ranging from 10 to 20 years; three (3) were sentenced to life imprisonment; twelve (12) were sentenced to death by hanging, which happened on October 16, 1946. Hermann Göring committed suicide before he could be executed.

What is unknown to most people, is that many more war criminals were incarcerated as a result of the twelve \(12\) Military Tribunals that followed the main Nuremberg trial. These trials occurred from December 1946 to April 1949. Of the one-hundred and forty-two (142) Germans convicted of war crimes, eighty-eight (88) men and one (1) woman remained incarcerated at Landsberg in January 1951.

12

The top brass in the US military were in attendance during these later tribunals, but then things took an unexpected turn:

As recently as 1949,

US Military Governor of Germany Lucius Clay had reviewed and confirmed the validity of nearly all the sentences. The US Supreme Court had also rejected every single one of the prisoners' appeals. Why, then, did High Commissioner John J. McCloy show these individuals such mercy in 1951?

Despite the broader context of the Cold War and the vociferous political debates in West Germany over the war criminals issue, McCloy did not justify his review of the Nuremberg sentences in the language of Cold War realpolitik or as a response to the agitations of pro-amnesty German political movements. Both McCloy and his Advisory Board on Clemency for War Criminals, viewing themselves as standing above the ever-shifting whims of German and American public opinion on these matters, articulated a vision of impartial American justice as inspiring and legitimizing their actions.

Notwithstanding the Nuremberg Trial sentences, US High Commissioner for Germany, John McCloy, oversaw the release of these incarcerated war criminals in 1951, via a series of hasty evidence-reviews. Despite the US Supreme Court having previously refused all prisoner appeals, McCloy essentially suggested that American justice would be impartial, and everyone should trust this process.

This was a unique operation within a wartime context. So, what occupied McCloy's time when he wasn't running Military Tribunals?

The Rockefeller "philanthropic fund" is nothing other than his own purse, in which the "oil king" can keep part of his capital without paying taxes.

The money in the fund is managed by a "council of trustees" consisting of representatives of the largest monopolies -- mainly Rockefeller's. Among them are John McCloy, former American High Commissioner in West Germany, Robert Lovett, former Secretary of Defense, and others. In 1950 John Foster Dulles, who had been a member of this council since 1935, became chairman of the "council of trustees". Now heading the fund is the oldest son of the "oil king" of America.

The CIA records that John McCloy was a member of the “council of trustees”, which was a group who represented the “largest US monopolies - mainly Rockefeller’s”. Are the trustees also the “council of the gods”?

Whatever the case, his own thoughts about what he achieved at Nuremberg was revealing:

“

I had the powers of a dictator as High Commissioner of Allied Forces in West Germany. I think I was a benevolent dictator. I think the rebuilding came off very well, with no significant problems.

—John J. McCloy

15

Contemplate McCloy’s quote and then reflect on his role in Nuremberg. He was the head of the “Advisory Board for the Clemency of War Criminals”. Was the intention to offer leniency to these criminals known beforehand?

Was the “rebuilding” that McCloy referred to, rebuilding the “council of the gods”, which the CIA said had been “established again” after Farben had been disbanded?

Pretty intense stuff. Kind of makes a fella lose a little more faith in our benevolent public "servants".
